Dumping, trucking of nuclear waste prompts protests

Residents, state, county and local officials are protesting plans to truck hazardous waste through area communities to a disposal site in Van Buren Township.

The shipment of 8,400 tons of radioactive waste material from Project Manhattan into Van Buren Township is expected to begin next Wednesday, Sept. 25.

The radioactive waste has been stored at a 191-acre site in New York since 1944 and includes residue and waste from uranium ore processing during the development of the atomic bomb during World War II.

Plans to transport the waste to Wayne Disposal Inc. site were only revealed to state and county officials Aug. 12, prompting protests and complaints from area residents and proposed state legislation to ban all radioactive material disposal in the state. Several area communities have agreed to participate in a lawsuit against the landfill parent company to prohibit the dumping of hazardous waste at the site.

"I'm willing to do what it takes to protect our community and our state," said State Rep. Reggie Miller, D-Van Buren Township who introduced the bill last week. "The bill that I submitted will ban radioactive waste in Michigan."
Miller introduced the bill to ban waste along with legislation to increase fees charged to trucking companies transporting the material through area communities. Plans include the trucking of 25 loads of hazardous waste from New York to Van Buren each week until January of next year.

Her proposed legislation follows a lengthy and contentious public meeting at the Ted Scott Campus of Wayne County Community College in Belleville recently. U.S. Rep. Debbie Dingell, D-Ann Arbor, Wayne County Executive Warren Evans, Miller and several other local officials scheduled the town hall meeting for residents. Representatives from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, U.S. Department of Transportation, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and representatives from Wayne Disposal owner Republic Services attempted to explain the safety and legality of the waste transport to the local site but were met with strong criticism from the crowded audience who at times jeered and booed comments.

"As part of our process for these types of projects, we seek to find where there are permitted disposal facilities," said Steve Pylypiak, chief of special projects for the Buffalo District of the Army Corps of Engineers. "Wayne Disposal being one of them." He said other sites licensed to accept the waste were being held in reserve for material with a higher radioactivity than the waste coming to Van Buren.

He assured the crowd that federal inspections of the Van Buren site as of 2022 found that it met all mandated safety protocols, despite public claims of several fires at the site. He said the trucking contractors will be required to follow federal safety requirements for transporting the waste through local communities. He maintained that accidents involving trucks during transport of waste material were "rare."

His assurances did not alleviate the concerns and criticism of the audience as multiple residents spoke at length of the threat and danger they believe the waste poses to the entire area, including the water table and effects on the local soil. The disposal site is near the I-94 service drive in Van Buren.

Cutting edge

Historic tree preserved as city sculpture

The towering Augustine Ascending Elm tree that graced the Northville city green for generations has been resurrected as a city monument after falling victim to Dutch Elm Disease.

The historic 110-foot tree which had to be removed in the summer of 2023 after being killed by the disease was long considered a landmark and symbol in the community and several nonprofit civic group members were determined to somehow preserve it. Their success will be officially recognized this Saturday when officials, including Northville Mayor Brian Turnbull, are on hand to dedicate a carving by chainsaw artist Tom Fink in the preserved trunk of the tree. The wooden tree trunk was moved to the grounds of the Northville Public Library, near city hall, where Fink has been carving the high school mascot from the remaining wood of the trunk. The artwork, officials said, pays tribute to the history of Northville.

The original tree before succumbing to Dutch Elm Disease.

"We are so pleased to turn the sadness at the loss of the wonderful old elm tree into a monument celebrating Northville's trees, history and community spirit. With this magnificent tree sculpture we are reminded of how lucky we are, whether a resident or visitor, to have lovely tree-lined Northville," said Northville Tree Champions President Jim Porterfield.

Northville resident Stacy Pearson, of "Stacy Kathryn Art", created the initial concept design and renderings of the mustang. The mustang is carved from the top of the trunk and below, spiraling around the trunk of the tree, is an artistic relief of images depicting contributions to the Northville community and a number of thriving industries. The carvings were created by Fink who is a retired automotive designer who now operates "Cut n Carve."

"It's been a pleasure working with everyone involved with this incredible project. I carved a number of large trees but this has been one of my biggest challenges," Fink said. "I've also really enjoyed the interaction and compliments of so many people I've met in the process."

Tom Fink of Cut n Carve works on the preliminary mustang carving at the top of the preserved trunk of the historic Augustine Ascending Elm tree.

Officials said the carving could not have been completed without the support of the Northville Community Support Fund. More about the nonprofit organizations involved in the project is available online at: Northville Tree Champions, Northville District Library, Northville Historical Society, Northville Art House, and Northville Garden Club.

The official dedication is set for 1 p.m. Saturday, Oct 21 in the city green space behind the Northville District Library at the corner of Wing and Cady streets.

The mustang head begins to emerge from the tree trunk.

Canton Center Road remains closed for emergency repairs

The Wayne County Department of Public Services has temporarily closed Canton Center Road over Willow Creek, south of Joy Road in Canton Township to perform emergency repairs. The closure is necessary, according to officials, to address critical issues with the culvert and ensure the safety and functionality of the road.

Motorists are advised to use detour routes to navigate around the closure. Northbound traffic on Canton Center Road can proceed straight through the intersection of Canton Center Road and Sheldon Center Road, turn right onto Sheldon Center Road, then onto Sheldon Road. Continue north on Sheldon Road to Joy Road and then turn left onto Joy Road and continue west to Canton Center Road.

Officials said the essential repairs would be completed as quickly as possible. For more information, contact the 24-hour customer service center at 888-762-3273.

Waste

Dingell and Miller said they agreed with a proposal by Gov. Gretchen Whitmer to significantly increase dumping fees at the site, a plan that has not been enacted.

The soil and concrete are only "slightly radioactive," said Liz Browne, materials management division director for the Michigan Department of Environment, Great Lakes, and Energy. She said a sample of the material was analyzed and determined to be within acceptable standards for disposal in Van Buren.

Despite the comments and assurances from officials, members of the crowd continued to criticize the disposal and demand a change in the disposal plan during the meeting which continued for more than 3 hours. The meeting grew contentious and included heated exchanges between current office holders and those seeking election to various state and county offices.

According to Van Buren Township Supervisor Kevin McNamara, the townships of Canton, Ypsilanti, Sumpter and Van Buren along with the cities of Belleville and Romulus have pledged to pay the cost of a lawsuit against Republic Waste, owners of Wayne Disposal, prohibiting the disposal of hazardous waste in the communities.

"I don't want radioactive waste in my community," McNamara stated during a recent meeting of the Van Buren Township Board of Trustees during which participation in the lawsuit against the landfill was approved.
